Examples of where an offset would be inappropriate include where: (a) residual adverse effects cannot be offset because of the irreplaceability or vulnerability of the indigenous biodiversity

					affected; (b) effects on indigenous biodiversity that are uncertain, unknown, or little understood, but potential effects are significantly adverse; (c) there are no technically feasible options by which to secure gains within acceptable timeframe. 3 No net loss and preferably a net gain: The biodiversity values to be lost through the activity to which the offset applies are counterbalanced which is at least commensurate or exceeded by the proposed offsetting activity, so that the result is no net and preferably a net gain when compared to that loss. No net loss and net gain are measured by type, amount and condition at the impact site and offset site and is subject to an explicit loss and gain calculation. 4 Additionality: A biodiversity offset must achieve gains in indigenous biodiversity above and beyond gains that would have occurred in the absence of the offset, including that gains are additional to any remediation and mitigation undertaken in relation to the adverse effects of the activity. Offset design and implementation must avoid displacing activities harmful to indigenous biodiversity to other locations. 5 Like for Like: The ecological values being gained at the offset site are the same as those being lost at the impact site across types of indigenous biodiversity, amount of indigenous biodiversity (including condition), over time and spatial context. 6 Landscape context: Biodiversity offset actions must be undertaken where this will result in the best ecological outcome, preferably close to the location of development or within the same ecological district, and must consider the landscape context of both the impact site and the offset site, taking into account interaction between species habitats and ecosystem, spatial connections and ecosystem function. 7 Long-term outcomes: The biodiversity offset must be managed to secure outcomes of the activity that last at least as long as the impacts, and preferably in perpetuity. 8 Time lags: The delay between loss of indigenous biodiversity at the impact site and gain or maturity of indigenous biodiversity at the offset site must be minimised so that gains are achieved within the consent period. 9 Trading up: When trading up forms part of an offset, the proposal must demonstrate that the indigenous biodiversity values gained are demonstrably of higher value than those lost, and the values lost are not indigenous taxa that are listed as Threatened, At-Risk or Data deficient in the New Zealand Threat Classification System list, or considered vulnerable or irreplaceable. 10 Offset in advance: A biodiversity offset developed in advance of an application for resource consent must provide a clear link between the offset and the future effect. That is, the offset can be shown to have been created or commenced in anticipation of the specific effect and would not have occurred if that effect were not anticipated. 11 Proposing a biodiversity offset: A proposed biodiversity offset must include a specific biodiversity offset management plan. 12 Science and matauranga Māori: The design and implementation of a biodiversity offset must be a documented process informed by science, including an appropriate consideration of matauranga Māori.

					13 Stakeholder participation: Opportunity for the effective participation of stakeholders should be provided when planning for biodiversity offsets, including their evaluation, selection, design, implementation and monitoring. Stakeholders are best engaged early in the offset process. 14 Transparency: The design and implementation of a biodiversity offset and communication of its results to the public should be undertaken in a transparent and timely manner. This includes transparency of the loss and gain calculation and the data that informs a biodiversity offset. And Any consequential changes or alternative relief to achieve the relief sought.
